

CASE STUDY – Cancer Research UK’s IS Department trials new shared desk scheme

Overview

The UK’s leading charity is piloting a new flexi-working scheme within the IS Department at its head offices in central London.

Cancer Research UK has joined forces with Condeco to implement its desk booking module of its Condeco software suite, which is enabling the IS department to manage its office space more efficiently.

Problem

Staff numbers within the department were, at times, flexing up to 200 to cope with large projects. There were 140 desks available and allocated to staff but as a good percentage of these staff were regularly working off-site, the IS Department was finding that its office space was vastly under-utilised.

With no more space available the department needed to expand its workforce without expanding its estate.

Condeco’s user-friendly desk booking software will ensure that the desks within Cancer Research UK’s IS Department space are fully utilised, eliminating the unnecessary wastage associated with empty desks.

Evaluation

Jane Swindle, IS Business Change Manager at Cancer Research UK, said: “We’re delighted to be working alongside the Condeco team on this new project.

Condeco has the potential to allow us to raise office utilisation, reduce our energy bill, reduce our carbon footprint and, in the process, make real estate savings.”

Paul Statham, managing director at Condeco, said: “Cancer Research UK is the largest and one of most well-known charities in the country. It is an organisation that is constantly seeking to reduce costs and, as a result, needs to ensure it is making full use of the office space it has available.”

He continued: “We are convinced that Condeco will now play a major role in helping them reach this goal and we look forward to working together to help the charity make efficiency and cost savings wherever possible.”
